WHY IS IT IMPORTANT FOR A CHILD TO LEARN A SECOND LANGUAGE?

Today, we live in a globalized world, where the new technologies facilitate communications and hence getting in contact with one another. People travel and move from one country to another with ease and in search for better opportunities, jobs, and education. Therefore, giving children the gift of a second language early in life is setting them for a great start.

Recent studies indicate that the best time for children to learn an additional language is during their first six years of life. It is during this period that children develop a natural ability to learn.

Scientists suggest that when it comes to ease of learning and proficiency in a foreign language, earlier is better. There is a “window of opportunity” for easily acquiring additional languages from the moment a child is born.

THE BENEFITS OF TEACHING AN ADDITIONAL LANGUAGE TO CHILDREN AS EARLY AS INFANTS ARE NUMEROUS

Very young learners acquire an additional language effortlessly, through hearing and experiencing lots of the target language, very much in the same way they acquire their mother tongue. Therefore, interaction is a critical part of this process.

Their pronunciation is more like that of a native speaker. Some experts believe this is due in part to physiological changes at puberty; by age 15, children's facial muscles and bones are nearly mature, and their musculature loses sensitivity to phonetic distinctions that are not relevant to the languages they speak. A psychological factor may also be at work: older children are more inhibited in trying out new sounds and more concerned about making mistakes.

Research has shown that learning an additional language enhances intellectual development and improves overall school performance.

Some studies suggest that children who study an additional language tend to score higher on standardized tests. They are able to perform better in math and logic skills than children with just one language. There is also some evidence that foreign language students are more creative and better at solving complex problems.

Providing an early language exposure prepares children for success in their future.

It enables them to form friendships worldwide. It opens their minds to more fully appreciate world literature and the arts. It opens doors to access greater career possibilities and enjoy much more traveling, but most important it simply gives them a different perspective and cross-cultural awareness while at the same time learn the language of their parents, grandparents, and older siblings.

THE DEMAND FOR CHILDREN'S LANGUAGES PROGRAMS CONTINUES TO INCREASE

Today, throughout the world, there is a growing demand for programs that serve the language needs of parents and children.

Parents want the best for their children and they know that one or more languages besides their mother tongue will provide them access to better opportunities. They want their little ones to have access to an additional language at ever younger ages for all the benefits that it gives their children.
